Funding Your Academic Innovations Through Grant Writing

Tuesday April 28th, Room 367

1:00pm – 2:30 pm (Live Session)

3:30pm – 5:00 pm (Recorded Session)

Success or failure in grant writing depends to a great extent on the quality of one's ideas, of course ... but it also depends to a surprising degree on one's grant-writing technique. Do it right, and you have a good chance at funding; do it wrong, and you're dead in the water.

One of higher education's leading grant writers, Dr. J. Juechter, will present a 90-minute online seminar on April 28, designed to give you the tools you need to succeed in an increasingly competitive funding environment.

In Funding Your Academic Innovations Through Grant Writing,

Dr. Juechter will present her Ten Commandments of Grant Writing – the critical do's and don'ts that can make the difference between a successful proposal and disappointment. In addition, she'll share insights and best practices on grant-related issues including:

- Organizing a grant team.
- Developing and translating creative ideas into successful grants.
- Following key elements of an agency's RFP and responding appropriately.
- Developing budget and evaluation segments that will impress the funding agency.
- Transferring the grant electronically to the agency.

RSVP is not required and walk in to either of the sessions are welcomed.

This online seminar is sponsored by Faculty Development Center and is made possible by the contribution of Bryant Major Field Test Implementation Team (Elizabeth Powers, Philip Lombardi, David Gannon, & Enoch Park)
